INDIGENOUS AUSTRALIAN STUDIES

The School of Indigenous Australian Studies offers full-time or part-time study to qualify for the Postgraduate Certificate of Indigenous Studies, the Postgraduate Diploma of Indigenous Studies, the Master of Indigenous Studies and Doctor of Philosophy. Prospective students should consult with the Postgraduate Coordinator.

Postgraduate research programs have been established to meet the growing demand for skilled graduates, knowledgeable about Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander perspectives and cultural considerations in relation to research and development. Such people are needed for employment in Indigenous organisations, government agencies and in many areas of education, training, business, industry and commerce.

The research programs have relevance to people from many fields: Social Sciences, Education, Law, Arts, Commerce, Medicine, Public Health and Science, including Engineering and Marine Biology. It is intended that the skills and knowledge attained from these Courses will aid in the economic and social transformation of Indigenous people by increasing the self-determination of those who are employed in Indigenous organisations.

MASTER OF INDIGENOUS STUDIES

The Master of Indigenous Studies coursework degree consists of 36 credit points. Students are required to complete the following seven subjects which include the 9 credit point dissertation (parts 1 and 2).

An additional 12 credit points* from any level 5 postgraduate subjects.

* Candidates with a bachelor degree and at least two years experience in relevant Indigenous issues may, at the discretion of the Pro-Vice-Chancellor, be granted up to a maximum of 12 credit points of study.

MASTER OF INDIGENOUS STUDIES WITH HONOURS

The Master of Indigenous Studies with Honours provides students with the opportunity to develop the skills, knowledge and understanding to undertake community-based Indigenous research in their own discipline area. Students will engage in direct interaction with Indigenous peoples during that process, identifying a topic for an independent research project relevant to their area of expertise. The course is closely aligned with the objectives of the Indigenous Australians research program under JCU's Area of Research Strength - People, Identity and Place. Cross cultural linking is a major aim of this course with research projects addressing the social, cultural and physical well-being of Indigenous Australians, their knowledge and epistemologies.

POSTGRADUATE DIPLOMA OF INDIGENOUS STUDIES

MODERN LANGUAGES

Postgraduate studies in languages are available as part of a number of different awards or degrees, including the Graduate Diploma of Arts, the Master of Arts and the degree of Doctor of Philosophy. Students specialising in a particular language may qualify for any of these awards. In some cases, degree programs can be specially tailored to cater for students' special needs. Prospective students are advised to consult the Head of the School of Arts and Social Sciences.

The School is, in accordance with state and national policies, committed to developing, in its students, language skills which are of use in the real world. Also in response to government policy it is committed to developing cross-cultural and inter-cultural knowledge as a way of increasing understanding between human beings.

Language and communication skills are now widely recognised as being critically important in many aspects of professional and business life. Given Australia's clear commitment to internationalisation, the demand for speakers of languages other than English is certain to grow.
